

What is love, anyway?

Chapter 1 by Madeleine Young

My life began the last day of sophomore year, when Adam Elming kissed me under the Oak tree outside of the art room. I loved him, I would have followed him to the end of the earth, only to find out I was being used. But before we start my story, we must know what my past was.

In seventh grade, i had a horrible crush on Adam. He was amazing. He was artistic, athletic, smart, and hot. His baby blue eyes and chocolate hair were impossible to resist. In eighth grade he fell in love with Jessica Warner, the sexiest, richest, most popular girl in the school. I was hidden in the shadows forever until the last day of freshman year, he left her.

By sophomore year, I was determined to get him to notice me. I dyed my hair blonde, forgetting my luscious brown hair, i ditched my glasses and got colored contacts, i started wearing makeup, and my wardrobe switched from jeans and sweatshirts to tight tanks and mini skirts. As I grew, the clothes i purchased only grew skimpier and tinier. I lost my best friend after she had too much of this. I had to get new friends, meaner friends, more popular friends.

By the last few months of the year I was considered popular. Jessica was forgotten from Adam's mind. By the end of the year, Adam had kissed me. We were a couple for the whole summer, and now my life has begun.
